Food safety. CFIA orders XL plant to fix more problems

Trouble continues for an Alberta meat plant as it tries to resume normal processing under the watchful eye of federal food-safety inspectors.

The Canadian Food Inspection Agency says on its website that its staff observed a number of problems last week at XL Foods.

They included meat areas that weren't adequately cleaned and a water sanitizer that wasn't maintained at a high enough temperature.

The CFIA says it ordered the plant's managers to take corrective action, which included sending potentially contaminated meat for rendering.

The plant in Brooks was closed Sept. 27 due to E. coli-contaminated meat that led to a massive recall.

Workers began slaughtering cattle Oct. 29 at the plant but there has been no word yet on when the beef can be sold to retailers or consumers.

"Over the course of the first week of operations, the CFIA determined that the establishment's overall food-safety controls were being effectively managed," the agency says on its website.

"As would be expected in a facility that has not been in regular operation for some time, there have been some observations made by CFIA that resulted in the CFIA issuing new corrective-action requests to XL Foods Inc. ... since the plant reopened."

The agency says it also requested the company submit corrective-action plans outlining how it will address the issues in the longer term and mitigate future risks.

The CFIA says it is still waiting on lab results before allowing XL Foods to sell trim and ground beef from the plant. THE CANADIAN PRESS

City administration is floating a lower separation distance between body-rub parlours and schools than initially proposed in March. RYAN TUMILTY/METRO

City could ease up on body-rub parlours

Keeping tabs. Admin recommends looser restrictions on parlours to avoid pushing them underground

ryan.tumilty@metronews.ca

City administration is recommending the city ease up on plans for tougher restrictions on body-rub parlours to avoid pushing them underground.

Councillors proposed in March to prevent the pseudo-massage parlours from locating within 300 metres of schools, parks and other areas where vulnerable groups gather.

They also proposed preventing body-rub parlours from locating within 300 metres of other parlours.

Administration is suggesting the city should back down from that standard in favour of a 100-metre distance, because it would be near impossible to locate a body-rub parlour anywhere but a few areas.

"Administration's concern is that reducing the opportunity for legitimate locations will lead to prospective body-rub-centre businesses operating without appropriate zoning or licensing approval," reads the report.

The report points out that with a 300-metre separation distance, new parlours could only open up around 99 Street and the Whitemud or near Yellowhead Trail and 142 Street.

Coun. Ben Henderson, who proposed the separation distance, said he is looking forward to the discussion, but when he proposed the idea he didn't want to drive the parlours underground.

"I don't believe for a second that these things are going to go away and the intention was to keep them closer to the surface where we can keep an eye on them." Henderson said he wanted to avoid a concentration of the parlours because of the problems that would cause.

"You don't want to start building red-light districts because that brings other kinds of problems with it."

Bylaws

- Body-rub parlours have to adhere to stringent guidelines for their operation, which include a background check on operators and regular inspections.
- The bylaws also require workers to take a course on their rights and the resources that are available to them.

If the proposed changes clear the city's executive committee Monday, they will have to go to a full council public hearing.

Minister eyes incentives for grow-op remediation

Providing incentives for remediating marijuana grow operations could reduce their harmful impact, says the province's senior crime-fighting politician.

Jonathan Denis, the solicitor general and justice minister, is finalizing plans for public consultations after hearing repeatedly from Alberta police that the number of grow-ops is on the rise and posing a bigger threat to public safety.

"The problem is getting worse, not better," Denis said. "To tackle a problem like this,

we can't just simply go and slam new legislation down."

The province plans to roll out its initiative in December, with Denis relying on Calgary MLA Rick Fraser to co-ordinate the project.

Denis said he expects new legislative recommendations to come from the project, including private-sector incentives for those willing to tackle homes with electrical and mould problems associated with grow-ops.

Data provided by the Alberta Law Enforcement Response Teams do not show an upward trend in the number of grow-ops busted in Alberta. In fact, 2011 marked a five-year low.

But ALERT acting Staff Sgt. Paul Wozney said that apparent decline may come down to resources. "We only have so many police officers that we can assign to this issue.... We obviously have a responsibility to address other issues in the community," he said, adding that he agrees a community-wide approach is needed to combat drug growers.

Let separate city body manage airport development: Mayor

City Centre Airport.

Mandel hopes construction will move more quickly

ryan.tumilty@metronews.ca

As the city takes the first steps toward redeveloping the airport lands, Mayor Stephen Mandel would like to see a separate corporation set up to fund the surrounding neighbourhood.

Mandel raised the idea last week as city council was asked to allocate $14.8 million for the early design work on the redevelopment of the airport lands. The city has also allocated $80 million for the expropriation of the lands.

In an interview later, Mandel said council has given clear direction on what it wants and it makes sense to expedite the project.

"People want to see things get done," he said. "Once you set the objectives and the direction, it can go forward."

lands, which will be known as the Blatchford neighbourhood when the project is completed. City administration believes the city has the expertise for the job.

"The city has been developing land for 40 or 50 years and the city does operate much the same way as a land-development company would operate," said Mark Hall, executive director of the land services for the city.

Hall said the city will design, construct and sell in a three-year cycle so it doesn't get ahead of market demand. He said the aim is to build a financially sustainable development, but also an environmentally and socially sustainable one.

"The financial viability of the project is absolutely a part of the equation, but it won't be favoured over the environmental sustainability or the other social goals," he said.

Home, sweet home

- When completed, the Blatchford neighbourhood created on the airport lands will be home to some 30,000 people.

Megan's funeral was held at the Roman Catholic

Many of the mourners were children, who joined some adults and brought the balloons outside when the service was over and released them as the coffin was carried to a waiting hearse.

The coffin itself was covered with pink flowers, which was Megan's favourite colour.

Obama and Romney blitz swing states

Final push. Obama leading by a slight margin in key states after more than 27 million Americans voted in advance of Tuesday's election

U.S. President Barack Obama and Republican rival Mitt Romney engaged in a frenzied cross-country blitz of the remaining toss-up states Sunday, with both sides predicting victory in a race that remains too close to call just two days before Election Day.

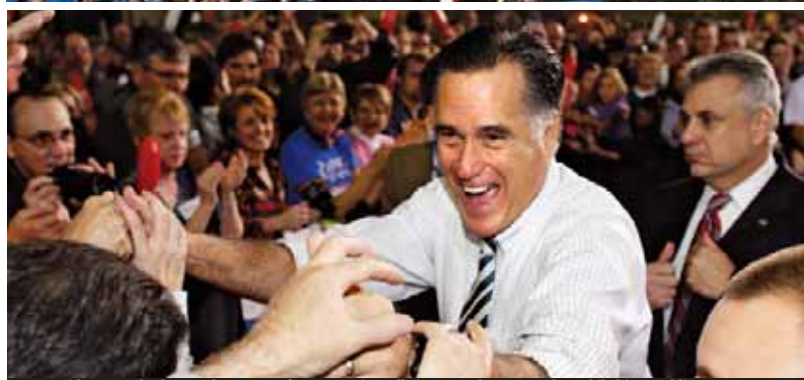

National opinion polls showed a race for the popular vote in Tuesday's election to be so close that only a statistically insignificant point or two separated the two rivals.

But the majority of polls in the battleground states — especially in the Midwestern states of Iowa, Wisconsin and Ohio — showed Obama with a slight advantage, giving him an easier path to the 270 electoral votes needed for victory. No Republican has won the White House without carrying Ohio.

Making his closing case to voters Sunday in Des Moines, Iowa, Romney pledged, if elected, to work with Democrats to restore the American dream and bring the economy roaring back to life.

"We're Americans. We can do anything," Romney said. "The only thing that stands between us and some of the best years we can imagine is a lack of leadership — and that's why we have elections."

Obama, too, said he is willing to work across party lines to break Washington's gridlock, but assured some 14,000 supporters who gathered in Concord, N.H., that he would not compromise key Demo-

"I know I look a little bit older, but I've got a lot of fight left in me," Obama said. "We have come too far to turn back now. We have come too far to let our hearts grow faint. It's time to keep pushing forward."

The final national NBC/Wall Street Journal Poll, conducted from Thursday to Saturday, showed Obama getting the support of 48 per cent of likely voters, while Romney received 47 per cent.

Battleground states

Under the U.S. system, the winner is not determined by the nationwide popular vote, but by state-by-state contests, making "battleground" states extremely important in such a tight race.

- Deja vu? That raises the possibility of a replay of the 2000 election when Republican George W. Bush won the presidency with an electoral vote majority, while Democrat Al Gore had a narrow lead in the nationwide popular vote.

- Registered voters. Obama's campaign said it had registered 1.8 million voters in key battleground states, nearly double the number of voters they registered in 2008.

Aftermath. Sandy victims pray for relief, electricity

Storm victims went to church Sunday to pray for relief and give thanks for their deliverance as cold weather settling in across the New York metropolitan area compounded the misery for people already struggling with severe gasoline shortages and power outages.

Hundreds of parishioners in parkas, scarves and boots packed the pews and stood in the aisles for Mass at a chilly Church of St. Rose in flood-ravaged Belmar, N.J. Firefighters and police officers sat in the front rows and drew applause.

With about 700,000 homes and businesses in New York City, its northern suburbs and Long Island still without electricity six days after the storm, New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo warned that many homes are becoming uninhabitable and that tens of thousands of people are going to need other places to stay.

More than 900,000 homes and businesses in New Jersey were still without electricity.

Damage has been estimated at $50 billion US, making Sandy the second-most expensive storm in U.S. history.

Ottawa student escapes bomb blast in Syria

JOE LOFARO
Metro in Ottawa

In the span of 10 days, Carleton University student Yaman Marwah went from sipping a coffee from a Second Cup in downtown Ottawa to escaping a barrage of deadly bomb blasts in Binnish, Syria.

The 18-year-old law and economics student met with Metro on Oct. 23, the day before his trip to his home country with his friend Faris Al Shawaf, and said he wanted to document his humanitarian aid efforts with his camera on the front lines and show the footage to the outside world.

"There's a lot of people who don't believe what's happening," said Marwah at the time, alluding to conflicting reports from Syrian media and other news sources. "I have 5,000 (friends) on Facebook. Once I publish things from my own camera, my own lens, those 5,000 people will believe that this is actually happening in Syria."

"So once you hear it from a person you know personally, that's totally different."

Since arriving in Syria on

Yaman Marwah holds his camera as he speaks with a member of the Free Syrian Army on Oct. 26 as they head to Taftanaz, Syria. PHOTO COURTESY OF FARIS AL SHAWAF

Oct. 26, Marwah has been sharing photos on Facebook.

The most arresting photo is the one he took after what happened to him on Saturday morning. In a Skype interview with Metro from Antakia, Turkey, Marwah explained how it will be a day he will never forget.

He said he was sitting in an Internet café looking at his photographs on a computer when he heard the roar of a plane nearby.

"When we went to the door toward the noise of the bombs, we were automatically — just by the force of the bomb — we were thrown away at least a metre back," said Marwah.

He said the blast was about 200 metres from where he was and he suffered a minor leg injury. Binnish was hammered by more rocket blasts, he said, which left about 15 dead and 50 injured.

Reuters reported Saturday's attack in Binnish came from government fighter jets.

Anti-U.S. military sentiment rises

Thousands of people have rallied against American deployment of Osprey military aircraft on a southern Japanese island amid escalating anti-U.S. military sentiment following recent crimes.

Protesters gathered Sunday at a Tokyo park demanding removal of 12 MV-22 Osprey hybrid aircraft from Okinawa. Ospreys were deployed in October despite local opposition over safety concerns following two crashes elsewhere.

They chanted, "Ospreys out! Marine Corps out!"

Anger is running high days after a U.S. airman allegedly assaulted a teenage boy on Okinawa, just two weeks after a curfew was imposed on all 52,000 U.S. troops in Japan after the arrest of two navy sailors in the alleged rape of a local woman.

Iran sets up new naval base

Iran's powerful Revolutionary Guards inaugurated a new naval base on Sunday to reinforce Tehran's authority over three Persian Gulf islands also claimed by the neighbouring United Arab Emirates, Iranian state TV reported.

The base near the Iranian mainland's southern port of Bandar-e Lengeh some 1,100 kilometres (700 miles) south of Tehran is the Guards' fifth in the Gulf. The Guards' navy chief Gen. Ali Fadavi said missile and marine units have been deployed there.

It lies north of the Iranian-controlled islands of Abu Musa, Greater Tunb and Lesser Tunb that dominate the approach to the strategic Strait of Hormuz, a key waterway through which about one-fifth of the world's oil supply passes.

The Revolutionary Guard and the U.S. navy both patrol the narrow waterway, which Iran had threatened to choke off in retaliation for tougher western sanctions over its suspected nuclear program.

Iran took control of the Persian Gulf islands in 1971, after British forces left the region. Since 1992, the UAE has repeatedly claimed the islands.

NDP weighs in on election. Hopeful for Obama victory Tuesday

As the NDP tried to lay the groundwork in Quebec over the weekend for a federal election victory in 2015, some of the scuttlebutt was on another political event closer on the horizon.

Opinion polls show a tight race between President Barack Obama and Republican rival Mitt Romney leading up to Tuesday's U.S. presidential election.

The favourite at a meeting of New Democrats in Montreal was more clear.

Several New Democrat MPs strongly hinted their allegiance was, not surprisingly, with the president. Some of the party's grassroots have even headed south of the border to work on his campaign.

NDP Leader Tom Mulcair said he hopes to work with a president who shares his party's values, particularly in terms of sustainable development.

Bountiful. School in B.C. polygamious community abruptly shut down

A school in Bountiful, B.C., with links to jailed polygamist leader Warren Jeffs has abruptly closed its doors, with most of its students now relying on home-schooling in a community that has long been accused of using classrooms to indoctrinate children rather than educate them.

Bountiful Elementary-Secundary School shut down without explanation in September, the province's Education Ministry confirms, and nearly all of its former students are being home-schooled. The school, which received provincial funding for some grade levels, had an enrolment of 265 students last year.

Bountiful is a small commune of about 1,000 people in southwestern B.C., not far from the U.S. border. Residents follow a fundamentalist form of Mormonism, which, unlike the mainstream Mormon church, condones polygamy as a tenet of the faith.

Protective snow barrier melting fast: Research

Global warming.

Snow in the Arctic keeps planet cool but is losing the fight, says Environment Canada

The spring snow pack in the Arctic is disappearing at a much faster rate than anticipated even by climate-change models, says a new study by Environment Canada researchers.

That has implications for wildlife, vegetation and ground temperatures, say the scientists, who looked at four decades of snow data for the Canadian Arctic and beyond.

Combined with recent news that the Arctic sea ice retreated to an all-time low this summer, it suggests climate change may be happening much faster than expected, said Dr. Chris Derksen, a research scientist for Environment Canada and one of the study's authors.

They studied 40 years of data from across the Arctic from April to June and found the decline in spring snow cover was actually slightly faster than the decline in sea ice that made headlines around the world.

"It's important for a number of reasons," Derksen said.

Not only does snow provide

The article published in the latest Geophysical Research Letters said the changes in the past five years — what Derksen cautioned is a very short period of time — were "profound."

Going home. Palestinian president suggests land in Israel is a lost cause

The Palestinian president has set off a strident debate by shattering a once-inviolable taboo, publicly suggesting his people would have to relinquish claims to ancestral homes in Israel.

Mahmoud Abbas's comments on the refugee issue, made in an interview on Israeli TV over the weekend, triggered hot responses from Palestinians and Israelis alike.

In Israel, it suddenly put the long-sidelined issue of peace talks back in the Israeli public's consciousness ahead of parliamentary elections.

Palestinians have maintained for six decades that Arabs forced from their homes during Israel's creation, as well as their descendants, have the right to reclaim their former property.

Israel says a mass return of what could be five million people would spell its end as the Jewish state. Also, Israel rejects the concept of a "right of return."

In the interview, Abbas was asked about his birthplace of Safed — now a town in northern Israel. He told the interviewer that while he would like to visit, he doesn't claim the right to live there.

"I am a refugee, but I am living in Ramallah (in the West Bank). I believe that the West Bank and Gaza is Palestine. And the other parts is Israel," Abbas said in English. "I want to see Safed. It is my right to see it, but not to live there."

The comments were widely seen as an acknowledgment that return of all the refugees would be impossible.

Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu wasn't impressed, noting that Abbas subsequently backtracked. "No one can forfeit the right of return," Abbas told Egypt's Al-Hayyat TV on Saturday. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Harper arrives in India to kick off six-day trip

Trade and investment focus. Currently trade sits at a modest $5.2 billion annually, and both countries hope to triple that by 2015

Hours before Stephen Harper's plane set down in India, he was already signalling his embrace of one of the world's most formidable economies — with a bite of a samosa.

On the way to Agra, where he eventually arrived on Sunday evening, Harper tucked into a platter of the savoury Indian pastry with three of his Indo-Canadian MPs.

"I like everything. I love Indian food. I don't eat it that often, but I love Indian food."

Harper's unusually long six-day trip to India will be heavily focused on encouraging trade and investment, but will also touch on the personal ties between the two countries. Several reporters from Indo-Canadian media outlets have come along for Harper's trip. He is set to visit Chandigarh in the Punjab region, from where so many Canadians hail. The first stop on Monday will be the Taj Mahal, the elaborate marble tomb built in the 17th century.

Later, Harper is to participate in a business forum in the capital, New Delhi. Trade between Canada and India sits at a modest $5.2 billion annually, but the countries would like to see at $15 billion by 2015. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Child killed by car bomb in Turkey

Turkey's leader says Kurdish rebels have detonated a car bomb in southeast Turkey, killing an 11-year-old child and wounding 18 other people.

Prime Minister Recep Tayyip Erdogan said the explosion occurred Sunday as an armoured police vehicle was travelling on a road in the town of Semdinli, near the border with Iraq. The bomb went off close to a wedding celebration.

Erdogan blamed the attack on the Kurdistan Workers' Party, or PKK, which is fighting for self-rule in Turkey's southeast and is active in Semdinli.

Former Serbian president cedes party leadership

Serbia's former pro-western president and the leader of the country's opposition, Boris Tadic, has stepped down from the helm of his Democratic party.

Tadic's move at a meeting of the party's leadership on Sunday comes after he and his party lost general elections earlier this year to the nationalists, former allies of Serbia's late strongman Slobodan Milosevic.

During his eight-year presidency, Tadic has helped Serbia reconcile with its former wartime foes Croatia and Bosnia and led it closer to the European Union. But he has failed to stem the country's rampant corruption and economic decline.

USS Enterprise: The voyage home

All good things ... Timeworn aircraft carrier ends its half-century of service

The world's first nuclear-powered aircraft carrier ended its remarkable career at sea on Sunday when it pulled into its home port for the final time after participating in every major conflict since the Cuban Missile Crisis of 1962.

The USS Enterprise began shutting down its eight nuclear reactors almost as soon as it arrived at its pier at Naval Station Norfolk in Virginia, where thousands welcomed the ship home from its 25th and final deployment after nearly eight months at sea. The ship will never move on its own power again and will eventually be scrapped in Washington state, making its final voyage a sentimental one for those who have sailed aboard "The Big E."

It is the second-oldest ship in the navy after the USS Constitution, and its age has frequently shown.

"She's just old, so you got to work around her," said Petty Officer 2nd Class Danielle Almarez. "We have to make our own parts sometimes because it just doesn't exist."

The navy will deactivate the Enterprise on Dec. 1, but it will take years for it to be decommissioned as its reactors are taken out. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Peak performance

The Enterprise's final deployment was anything but a sentimental victory lap:

- The ship's fighter planes flew more than 2,200 combat sorties and dropped 56 bombs in Afghanistan
- In a show of force to Iran, the ship also passed through the strategic Strait of Hormuz 10 times, a figure that an official said is more than double the typical amount

A federal burial fund meant to give impoverished veterans a final salute has rejected over two-thirds of the applications it's received since 2006.

The rejected pleas either did not meet eligibility criteria or failed a means test, which says a qualifying veteran's annual income must have been less than $12,010 per year.

U.S. election. Politics will dominate markets this week

Stock markets will likely be in for quiet trading at the beginning of this week with traders cautious ahead of the U.S. election on Tuesday that is too close to call.

"It's a huge week on the political scene," said Colin Cieszynski, market analyst at CMC Markets Canada, who observed that China will also be in focus. The Communist Party's 18th Party Congress meeting kicks off on Thursday, which will see the leadership transition of the party and also the country.

The Toronto markets chalked up a rise of 0.65 per cent last week in the wake of positive Canadian earnings reports. New York markets were slightly lower despite strong U.S. economic data, including consumer confidence at the best level in almost five years, and data showing expansion in the U.S. and Chinese manufacturing sectors.

The week was capped by a stronger-than-expected U.S.

'Fiscal cliff'

Regardless of the outcome of the election, there is a growing amount of uncertainty over the so-called fiscal cliff facing the U.S. economy.

- The fiscal cliff refers to a variety of tax hikes and massive budget reductions that will come into effect at the end of December unless Republicans and Democrats can come together with an alternative budget plan.

Endangered pay phones prove their worth in emergencies

Telecom. While Sandy shows how valuable archaic technology can be, least-profitable booths in Ontario and Quebec are threatened

The events of Superstorm Sandy are raising questions about the importance of pay phones in emergencies, even as two of Canada's largest telecom companies say they will tear out some public telephones unless they are allowed to sharply raise prices.

New Yorkers were forced to turn to their neighbourhood's coin-operated phones last week as flood waters knocked out power and cellphone reception in areas ravaged by Sandy, the massive storm that swept across the Eastern Seaboard.

But a push from Bell Canada and Bell Aliant Inc. could make it harder to find those pay phones in Canada during emergencies.

Earlier this year, both companies made applications to the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission for rate hikes that could double the price of a pay-phone call.

Under the submission, they are asked for the ability to boost the price of a local call to as much as $1 each, compared to the current price of 50 cents.

Then in September the two

People wait to use a pay phone on Bright Beach Avenue on Oct. 31 in the Brooklyn borough of New York, after Superstorm Sandy knocked out cellphone reception. telecom companies added extra pressure to their request by saying that without a rate increase, they would be forced to get rid of their least-profitable pay phones.

That could mean that up to 25 per cent of their pay phones in Ontario and Quebec would disappear if the CRTC doesn't allow them to raise prices.

When a severe storm hits and the power is knocked out, suddenly a cellphone is only as good as its battery life and reception level.

Several community groups have raised concerns about the impact on Canadians if phones were to further disappear.

"We're asking for a larger reassessment of the role of pay phones in the communications system by the Commission," said John Lawford of the Public Interest Advocacy Centre, who made a submission to the CRTC earlier this year.

"We do think they have a role, and not enough serious attention is being paid to the issue. It's being allowed to drift because there was an assumption there would be local pay-phone competition that didn't materialize."

Community organizations have also raised concerns that low-income Canadians would lose a crucial form of communication.

Mini vs. full-size: iPad buyers weigh the 1.8-inch difference

Should you go 7.9 or 9.7? It's one of two big questions facing indecisive consumers who are thinking about buying a new iPad but aren't sure which one to choose.

The new iPad mini, which went on sale in Canada on Friday, has a 7.9-inch screen, versus the 9.7-inch display on the newest full-size iPad (that's about 20 and 24.6 centimetres for metric-system sticklers).

The other magic number to consider is 170 — as in the price difference between an iPad mini and a similarly equipped version of the latest large-sized iPad.

On the low end, a Wi-Fi-only 16-gigabyte iPad mini is $329, versus $499 for the big iPad. The most expensive 64-gigabyte iPad mini — out later this month — is Wi-Fi and mobile-network-ready. It'll go for $659, while the latest upgrade of the iPad with the same specs goes for $829.

So is it worth an extra $170 for the larger iPad? Or put another way, will price-conscious buyers regret not spending the extra $170 if they go with the cheaper iPad mini?

The iPad mini's smaller screen brings down its cost and Apple also saved a few bucks by sacrificing a bit of screen quality.

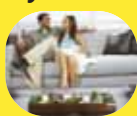

Text on the iPad mini has some clear raggedness around the edges. But it may not be apparent to many users unless they're doing a side-by-side comparison with a larger iPad or another tablet with better screen resolution.

The iPad mini weighs in at about .68 pounds to the 1.44 pounds of the newest Wi-Fi-only iPad. It doesn't sound like a lot but the weight difference makes it far more comfortable to hold one-handed for long stretches of time. The smaller format also makes it easier to palm. THE CANADIAN PRESS

PLAY IT COOL — IT'S WINTER, AFTER ALL

URBAN COMPASS
Terence Harding
edmonton@metronews.ca

When exactly does one turn into a whiner, whinger and wailer when it comes to winter?

Apparently the cold weather last week took many people by surprise. They must have all moved here last week if that was the case. Though the snow and cold came early this year, it was hardly unprecedented. It comes with living very far north of the equator, just in case there are some people who don't know that.

The cold weather sparked one media person to opine that she hated the cold and longed for a warmer climate than what is available to us here.

Snow days

"As I kid, I don't remember being freaked out by the snow and cold. All it did was change the kinds of games and activities my friends and I would engage in. Winter was about snow forts, snowball fights with the neighbour kids, tobogganing and skating."

But let's take a look at what comes along with some of those warm climates.

I don't think anyone in their right mind would trade the vagaries of Edmonton's weather for a residence in Syria, where the average temperature in the winter is a relatively balmy 10 C. Being bombed by a repressive regime hardly seems like a reasonable trade-off for not having to shovel snow.

Living in the allegedly Democratic Republic of Congo would be snowless bliss as long as you don't have an aversion to alleged sexual violence directed at women.

Of course, we could all move to Florida or Arizona and then hope we don't get sick and find out all about the ins and outs of a private health-care system.

Having lived in Miami, I can tell you that I often longed for some cold weather to kill the king-sized cockroaches or to lessen the smell of garbage baking in the sun.

As I kid, I don't remember being freaked out by the snow and cold. All it did was change the kinds of games and activities my friends and I would engage in. Winter was about snow forts, snowball fights with the neighbour kids, tobogganing and skating.

But someplace along the line it seems that many people change from embracing winter to detesting it.

We carp about the snow, about scraping windshields or waiting in the wind for a bus. Those things can definitely be a challenge. But as my friend Thomas is fond of saying, those are definitely first-world problems and they pale by comparison to what many people in the world must endure every day.

So when it comes to winter, we should just accept it as a northern fact of life and chill out for the next few months.

Starfighter feeling Disney after all

George Lucas's filmmaking outpost, Skywalker Ranch, is so far removed from the Hollywood moviemaking machine he once despised that it may as well be on the forest moon of Endor.

Which is why the announcement that Lucas is selling the Star Wars franchise and the entire Lucasfilm business to the Walt Disney Co. for more than $4 billion US is like a laser blast from outer space for Dale Pollock.

the 1999 biography Skywalker, said George Lucas disdained the Disney culture in interviews he gave in the 1980s, even though he admired the company's founder. "He felt the corporate 'Disneyization' had destroyed the spirit of Walt," Pollock said.

Lucas said through a spokeswoman on Saturday that he never said such a thing. But his anti-corporate streak is renowned. In the Lucasfilm-sanctioned documentary Empire of Dreams, Lucas says on camera that he is "not happy that corporations have taken over the film industry." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

News Worth Sharing

Media will always have to report on the tough stuff. But we know that Canada is full of compassionate individuals, inspiring projects and stories worth celebrating. Here's just one.

They say that kindness is contagious — and for one Beaumont family, that's especially true.

When the Dunnings first moved to Edmonton, access to second-hand clothing in their community helped them get on their feet.

Now, years later, they're not leaving the community hanging. The family is no longer struggling financially, so Melodie Dunning and her husband decided to give back.

They organized a community drive at the Beaumont Community Church — the first of what they hope will be many monthly events.

Dunning collected clothing from family, friends and neighbours and gathered articles that her own children had outgrown. The drive was open at no cost to anyone who needed a bit of extra help.

Dunning has never forgotten the help her community gave her family — and hopefully, that burden of finding affordable clothing has been removed for others.

To donate, contact Dunning at 780-265-5610, and she'll arrange to pick up all clothing.

Sally Field stars in Steven Spielberg's new film Lincoln as Mary Todd, the wife of the assassinated president. HANDOUT

2 SCENE

What if Lincoln could send a text message?

Lincoln. Sally Field talks about getting to know co-star Daniel Day-Lewis through modern-day means

Metro World News in Hollywood

Sally Field didn't have any rehearsal time for Lincoln, in which she plays Mary Todd Lincoln opposite fellow Oscar-winner Daniel Day-Lewis' Honest Abe. Luckily, the pair had another way to develop the rapport and sense of intimacy necessary to portray the long-married couple: text messaging. In character.

You and Daniel Day-Lewis would text each other, in character, before and during production?

I actually kept all the texts. I printed them up. I will keep them forever. They were breathtakingly wonderful and important to me because he kept doing it throughout the whole filming. He would write me after I'd done big scenes. It meant so much to me, and I will never reveal it. I will never reveal what they are. They are mine, they belong to me — a little like what Mary Todd felt about Mr. Lincoln. She burnt many of his letters. "He belongs to me." And that relationship belongs to me and I will never share it. But I will talk about the texts. It was so wonderful and so funny, a lot of it. And so concise. You know, we were texting, but as precisely Mr. Lincoln and precisely Mary Todd as we could manage. In the middle of last summer, he took to sending me limericks, and I would answer him by being critical. You know, "Is this the way you spend your time?" And criticize his lack of intelligence and his use of language (laughs).

It seems daunting to apply that manner of language to typing with your thumbs on a phone.

Yeah. It was really hard to do. It was helped by the fact that I was in the midst of research myself, so I was reading all these letters that were written of the feeling of the time. The way they used language was incredible. And also [screenwriter] Tony [Kushner]'s words were already being imprinted on my head, so I had some sense of the use of the language, and it was really a challenge much of the time to say what I wanted to say and not lose how it is that it should be said or it would be said at the time.

Have you ever done anything like that with a co-star before?

You know, I have never done a role that's this intense and emotional and connected to one human being and never have any rehearsal. We never had any rehearsal. So many of the scenes that you see between Mary and Mr. Lincoln are literally walk on set and do it. And do very few takes. But we had done so much work, he and I, and I think we both have enough miles in the saddle, and the bubble that was created for us by Steven [Spielberg] and by him to stay immersed in this world, it made it very interesting and very challenging — but in a good way — to work. The difficulty is owning the language. It's so difficult to say.

It must be nice being one of the few people in this film that doesn't have to worry about outlandish facial hair. No, but I had to worry about other things, like gaining weight.

You've mentioned Lincoln was very critical of Mary Todd, particularly about her weight.

Yes. He would always tease her about that. But he would do it with a sense of humour. It's in one of the letters. She would always threaten him that she was going to go and find another beau, even when they'd been married a long time. She would always dig it into him, and he said, "Have you weighed yourself?" It's in one of the letters. When I did this role, I gained 25 pounds. It was really important to me to get some of that girth. So we didn't pad anything.

You look fantastic now. I haven't eaten since (laughs).

Modern twist

Texts from Lincoln. As Sally Field explained to Metro, she developed and maintained her relationship with Daniel Day-Lewis while portraying Abraham and Mary Todd Lincoln by text messaging each other in character. Of course, Field has vowed to keep the texts to herself, but she did give us a taste of one such message, sent shortly before Day-Lewis began filming: "I know that the task before you is an enormous one, but my task is you. And that is my sole task. And so therefore I will be on your porch tomorrow. Your choice is to let me in or not. And whether you let me in or not, I will not go. In lieu of a carriage, find your shoes." So how did Day-Lewis, as Lincoln, respond? "He wrote me back graciously and said, 'OK, fine,'" Field says.

Salman Rushdie revisits his epic tale of India's independence 31 years later

Midnight's Children.

Author says writing screenplay was like having an argument with his younger self

LIZ

liz.brown@metronews.ca

Salman Rushdie was only 34 when he won the Booker Prize for his novel Midnight's Children. That was in 1981. Twenty seven years later, over a dinner with his filmmaker friend Deepa Mehta, he got to talking about movie rights to his storied novel.

Right there, Mehta asked to buy the rights. He sold them to her for $1.

And so began a collaboration culminating in the release of the film adaptation of his book, which opens in theatres this Friday.

Midnight's Children follows its hero Saleem Sinai, who was born at midnight on Aug.

15, 1947, the day of India's independence from the British Raj. Sinai and other children born at this time are gifted with magic powers and as Sinai matures, his life parallels the growing pains of a newly independent India.

Rushdie had the difficult task of paring down his hefty 500-page novel into a screenplay that would be palatable for moviegoers.

To take a story that spans the history of India from 1917 to 1977 and compress it into a 148-minute film required some serious editing. "In the end, you have to ask yourself over and over again what is the essential story. It's finding a way

Fatwa

Filming

When most hear the name Salman Rushdie, they automatically associate it with fatwa. Iran's Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini issued a fatwa, or ruling according to Islamic law, against Rushdie in 1988 following the publication of Rushdie's novel The Satanic Verses. Khomeini's fatwa ordered for Rushdie's execution and subsequently the author went into hiding. Today, Rushdie says he rarely feels the effects of the fatwa. However, while filming Midnight's Children in Sri Lanka, production was shut down for two days because of issues with the Iranian foreign ministry. "We're not exactly clear what happened," he says, speculating that someone in Iran's foreign ministry told the Sri Lankan ambassador they disapproved of the filming. According to Rushdie, the moment the Sri Lankan president was notified production was shut down, he overturned it and they were able to resume work.

of telling the story in the most compact way and then just having the faith that other things like the cinematography, the costumes, the actual performances, will add back a lot of what you've taken out," says Rushdie.

Wrestling with a story he had written nearly 30 years ago proved an interesting experience for Rushdie as well.

"When I started writing Midnight's Children, I was 28 years old. It's almost a different person who wrote it. Now I'm 65. It was like having an argument with your younger self on how to tell the story," he says.

Deepa Mehta transforms Rushdie tale into beautiful film

Midnight's Children opens Friday. HANDOUT

Midnight's Children. Director asked Booker prize winner for movie rights to beloved book

scene@metronews.ca

In 2008, a year after Deepa Mehta's film Water was nominated for an Oscar for Best Foreign Language Film, she teamed up with Salman Rushdie to develop a movie from one of his novels.

"To this day, I have no clue what made me turn around to him and say, 'Hey Salman, who has the rights to Midnight's Children,'" she says.

As soon as Rushdie agreed to sign over the option to one of his best-known books, a door-stopping epic about Saleem Sinai, a Zelig-like character whose remarkable life was inextricably linked to India's transition from British colonialism to independence and the partition of India, she was panicked, but only for a moment.

"I said, 'O God, what have I done?' Everything went through my mind at the same time: iconic book, iconic writer, Booker of the Booker, everyone knows it in the world, millions of readers ... what have I done? Then that just left. All that doubt just left and I was thrilled."

Saleem's (Satya Bhabha) journey begins when he is born at the stroke of midnight, Aug. 14, 1947, the precise moment India divided. He is one of the happy children "of the glorious hour," joining an elite group of kids who share his birthday, including Shiva of the Knees, Saleem's adversary and Parvati-the-witch.

Unfortunately for him, he can only see and hear them as visions in his head. His extra-sensory ability, giant nose and questions about parent-age make him an outcast in his own family. As he grows up, he becomes a soldier, suffers amnesia, lives in exile, survives a "cleansing" of the Jama Masjid slum, is held as a political prisoner and reconnects with some of the Midnight's Children.

"It's basically a coming of age story," says Mehta, who shot the film in 651 different locations in Sri Lanka over 69 days, "which is what attracted me to the book for years. It's a story of searching for family. It's about love and how sometimes bloodlines aren't the only things that unite us."

Out Fox-ing your mother has never been so much fun

Prank My Mom. New hidden-camera show hosted by Kill Bill actress aims to give serious parents a shock with hilarious results

scene@metronews.ca

Vivica A. Fox hosts Prank My Mom, a hidden-camera series that sets up unsuspecting moms for big surprises. Children announce they are pregnant, under arrest, have to retrieve a sex tape or posted mom's profile on a fictitious dating site and wait for her reaction. It's a ruse designed to bring her a little excitement. Metro talked to the host about the show and her hectic career.

Vivica, you're hysterical! Your attitude sweetens the emotional roller coaster that is Prank My Mom.

Absolutely! It's been a good fit for me, and surprising for a lot of people. They say, "I never knew you were really funny!" What? I've done a lot of comedies — like Booty Call and Curb Your Enthusiasm — but they forgot! And I've been punked by Tichina Arnold. I love Prank My Mom because moms are so serious, especially concerning their kids. These pranks can be pretty outrageous. The moms go wild. When it's revealed as a prank they are so relieved their kid doesn't have a sex tape and isn't a sex surrogate or going to jail, it's just "Whoo-hoo!" And then we talk it off with a dozen roses! One mom was hitting security officers with her purse and when it was over she said to her daughter, "I'd do anything for you," even though she'd broken the law and assaulted police. We haven't had any moms who've become upset with us.

What about hitting home, pranking your mom or being pranked?

As of right now, no, I don't know about my mom. I'll think about that one. We could get her at church. She's very proud and defensive of her church! The show Punk'd had been trying to get me for a very long time. I was at a photo shoot and my friend Tichina came to visit and pretended she was pregnant. I should have noticed when she came in full makeup, but I was busy with my shoot. Did she ever get me! Her water broke and the paramedics from hell showed up. I turned into a mama bear and stopped them from taking an uncompromising picture of her and told them to put up the cameras or I'd inflict bodily harm! When it was over I was sweating for a half hour to calm down. What! People were saying I'm always so red carpet ready but they learned you don't mess with me. That's the other side of Viv!

You're doing this show and have 11 films due out next year. Yikes.

I've been very blessed that my producer Lita Richardson strategized not to limit us. I host, produce, do theatre, film and TV and that has been the key. I'm also on another sitcom called Mr. Box Office. You have to control your career and the product for your audience. I find it to be so fulfilling and I'm proud of my hands-on part in it. Oh! Plus I have my own hair line for busy sexy women (vivicafoxhair.com). Yes I am busy.

How do you relax? Or do you?

Oh no, honey. Are you kidding me? I love working and I love what I do and I'm happy and blessed but I do know how to relax. I go to the spa and take my godson Christian to the mall and play with him. And, I spend a lot of time with my family. I've learned to take the time to smell the roses, to go play. I had to learn that after I built two homes and sold them!

Time to Drive in a different direction

Emerson Drive
THE CANADIAN PRESS/HO - KRISTIN BARLOWE

New Album. Alberta outfit's latest offering, Roll, is something that 'had to be done' according to lead singer Brad Mates

Emerson Drive says it's taking a different direction and pushing the edge with its new album Roll. The five-member band, originally from Grand Prairie, Alta., released its fifth album Oct. 30 and lead singer Brad Mates is curious to see if fans will get on board.

"Knowing that we have a few years under our belt now, the last thing that we wanted was just to go back in the studio and make another album that wasn't, I guess, fine-tuned," Mates said in an interview from Nashville.

"When I say that, it mostly has to do with the musical sound of what you're hearing now compared to stuff before. I think we're kind of pushing the edge musically when it comes to the sound of this album and I think you're hearing more of what we were kind of going after for certain songs over the last 10, 11 years."

"I really feel like this is probably the first album that we've done where I really feel like it's a full, complete Emerson Drive record. It's got different dynamics to it."

For starters, the band has written all but one of the 11 songs on Roll themselves. It's the most songs they've penned for an album.

The first single, She's My Kind of Crazy, quickly climbed country music charts. Mates joked that it was inspired by his wife. Mates, along with Emerson Drive guitarist and background vocalist Danick Dupelle, wrote the second single, Let it Roll, with Chris Thorsteinson and Dave Wasyliw of Winnipeg-based Doc Walker.

With lines like "Learning songs in the basement" and "A million miles out the window," Mates says Let it Roll is a reflection of the band's journey through the music business and, literally, life on the road.

Emerson Drive and Doc Walker have frequently gone head-to-head at the Canadian Country Music Association Awards. In 2007 for instance, Doc Walker won album of the year, while Emerson Drive took home trophies for single of the year for Moments and group of the year. But they'll hit the road together for a tour in 2013.

Mates said a collaboration just made sense because they've been friends for 16 years.

"Every time we see the Doc guys, it's a good friendship that's been built over the years," said Mates.

"I think we have a lot in common with how our bands started out, the steps that we took to get to where we're at today and I think there's a lot of respect between all of us when it comes to that."

Mates also said some of the other songs on Roll may be a little bit darker than in the past.

But Emerson Drive didn't want to play it safe and stick to what Mates said people think of as the "parameters" of country music. Roll is Emerson Drive, but with a little rock blended in.

"That was the goal to either have people go 'Wow, this is really great and it's different' or people go 'I don't know,'" said Mates.

"Either way you look at it, an artist has to go through that in their career where they make an album...trying to get 100 per cent of what represents the group. And a lot of times you either win big or it's just one of those albums that becomes kind of a dark horse in your career, but still has a spot that you look back on that's important."

"I feel like this is a record that had to be made and either way, if it wins or if it is just one of those that kind of stays back in the shadows, I think that again, it had to be done that way." THE CANADIAN PRESS

Lawsuit against Spears' family thrown out of court

Britney Spears has one less headache to worry about, as a judge has dismissed former manager Sam Lufti's case against the singer and her family, according to Hollyscoop.

Lufti's suit had claimed that Spears' mom defamed him in her book and her dad assaulted him and that Spears herself owed him nearly $1 million in unpaid wages because of a verbal agreement that he would manage her for a four-year period. Lufti is reportedly planning to appeal.

Emma Stone not rushing to the altar anytime soon

Emma Stone and her Amazing Spider-Man co-star Andrew Garfield apparently couldn't be happier together, but that doesn't mean the world should be expecting engagement news anytime soon.

Amanda Bynes threatens to sue over latest allegations

Amanda Bynes has been accused of engaging in a lot of unstable and unlawful behaviour this year. But apparently she draws the line at an In Touch magazine report that she paraded around a New York tanning salon completely naked, telling Celebuzz in a text message it wasn't true.

"That's not true, I'll sue."

The story claimed that Bynes emerged from a private tanning room completely naked and looking for a pair of goggles.

She "didn't seem to care that everyone saw her naked," a source says, adding that Bynes looked "painfully thin."

Five life lessons I have learned from my toddler

Wee ones. Two-year-olds actually have a lot of wisdom to impart

HAILEY EISEN

yummymummyclub.ca

Toddlers are incredible because, for the most part, they exist in a pure and natural state — untainted by society's expectations, standards and rules. They do what they want, when they want, until someone forces them to stop. They speak their minds and act without inhibition. Adults can learn a lot from them! Here's what mine has taught me.

Be persistent

If you want something badly enough, it's worth going after. Whether this means cajoling, bargaining, pleading or even stomping your feet. Even if someone is standing in the way of making your dream/goal/desire a reality, a healthy dose of conviction is sometimes all you need to break down that barrier. There's no talking my daughter out of something once she's made up her mind.

Be in the moment

If there's anyone who can teach us about mindfulness, it's a tod-dlar. It's amazing to watch a kid play. It's as if nothing around them matters. They aren't worrying about how the week's weather forecast will interfere with their play dates or what to wear to the family dinner party. Kids live in the moment. They don't waste any time worrying about things in the future that they have no control over anyway.

Let your emotions flow

Have you ever watched a two-year-old process emotions? Mine can go from laughing hysterically, to crying, to sulking, to laughing in a matter of minutes. She expresses her emotions as she feels them, so she's never at risk of keeping them pent up. She doesn't know about holding a grudge and the longest she can stay angry with someone is five minutes.

Forget what others think

Do you ever wonder how you'd live your life if no one was watching? That's how my child lives every day. It may sound cliché, but it's totally liberating. I'm taking cues from her and quieting that inner voice that says, "What if they don't like me? What if they think I look fat?" As my daughter practices her plié sauté on a busy sidewalk wearing a tutu and a mismatched hat with chocolate smeared on her cheek, I have to ask myself: who cares? And the answer I'm going for is: not me!

There is a lot adults can learn from toddlers. ISTOCK

Love yourself

My daughter is happiest when positioned in front of the full-length mirror in our front foyer. She'll sing, dance, and have full conversations with herself.

She's so happy with her own reflection that she never looks upon herself with criticism. This is what we all felt about ourselves when we were kids, before we started listening to the criticism of others. When was the last time you looked yourself in the mirror and felt nothing but love? When was the last time you celebrated your accomplishments? Take a lesson from this kid and start loving yourself more today!

YUMMYMUMMYCLUB.CA IS AN ONLINE RESOURCE TO HELP BUSY WOMEN SURVIVE MOTHERHOOD

Are there real risks to colouring your hair if you're expecting?

KIM FOSTER

yummymummyclub.ca

Is hair dye harmful to your developing baby? There is a lot of rumour, a lot of urban myth and a lot of confusion out there.

First thing to know: There is very limited absorption of the chemicals used in hair dye through your skin. This is true, unless you have burns or open sores on your scalp. Or unless you're eating it.

Motherisk — the gold-standard source for pregnancy-related information — reviewed 25 studies on the subject of hair treatments and pregnancy, and concluded that hair treatments are "unlikely to cause adverse fetal effects."

There are no known or identified risks or birth defects that have been linked to hair chemicals, and "for the average pregnant woman, receiving hair treatments three to four times during pregnancy does not appear to increase risk of adverse effects on the fetus."

There are studies that look at hairdressers themselves: A population that is exposed to hair chemicals on a more or less daily basis.

One such study compared 550 hairdressers to a control group of women never exposed, and they found "no statistically significant differences in fetal loss, preterm birth, small for gestational-

Studies show that dying your hair during pregnancy is "unlikely to cause adverse fetal effects." ISTOCK age babies, congenital malformations, or achievement of developmental milestones among their children."

All of this is extremely reassuring. Years of experience and observation, coupled with the existing research, tells us that there is no cause for concern.

Bottom line: Colouring your hair when you are pregnant is considered safe. Of course the thing about research is that there's always new stuff coming to light. Although this is how things look right now, I cannot promise that we will never find any data that contradicts the basic position that colouring your hair is safe.

So what to do? You have to weigh things for yourself. It's important to feel good about yourself when you're pregnant. Maybe, for you, that means taking particular care of your appearance and colouring your hair. Maybe for you that means not having to worry about a potential, unknown risk. It has to be up to you.

3 LIFE

Noticing some mo bros and sistas?

GILBERT
life@metronews.ca

In the next few weeks, you may see many men developing their whiskers in an exceptional way.

It's Movember — a combination of moustache and November — a time when men grow a moustache during the whole month of November.

By doing so, you participate in an awareness campaign against males' most pressing health issues, notably prostate cancer.

The worldwide campaign culminates in a multitude of fund-raising parties, with proceedings going to programmes dedicated to fighting against prostate cancer and males' mental health.

Participation in Movember requires a guy to register for the campaign, with a completely shaved face starting on November 1.

The ultimate objective is to instill, throughout the month, discussions in all walks of life about the often ignored issues facing males' health.

Since its inception in 2004, Movember activities have spread around the world. Canada joined the movement in 2007 and this year such activities will be held in 21 countries.

In 2011, as many as 854,000 Canadians participated, raising $125.7 million for the Movember Foundation.

Mo Sistas

So it's Movember, the month to grow moustaches and fight prostate cancer. And you are a female. Doesn't really concern you, does it?

Well, yes actually. There are ways women can also play a role, and a vital one at that, during the Movember campaign.

"Just because you can't grow a moustache doesn't mean you can't have a life-saving conversation, create awareness and contribute to a great cause," said Angela McNally of Toronto, who has been a Mo Sista since 2010 and currently sits on its Toronto committee. "Standing behind this cause shows you are passionate to see a change in men's Health."

Mo Sistas play a crucial role during the campaign by acting as team captains, recruiting others to join, sparking conversations, lending support to Mo Bros who grow moustaches and raising general awareness for the importance of men's health, said Pete Mbombaci, director for Movember Canada.

There were more than 16,000 registered Mo Sistas last year. They have formed regional committees in Toronto, Calgary and Montreal.

GILBERT NDIKUBWAYEZU/FOR METRO

Movember expands scope to include mental health issues

In the spirit of continuing to address crucial issues that affect men's health, Movember has expanded its scope of campaign to include males' mental health.

Mental health problems affect 3.4 million Canadian males each year, said Pete Mbombaci, national director of Movember Canada, as he explained the reasons why the movement decided this year to include mental health in its campaign activities. In other words, one-in-five Canadian men is affected by mental health issues. This trend raises the rate of suicide among men. Despite the lower cases of depression reported, it has emerged that four out of five suicides among young Canadian people are committed by men. These alarming numbers are what prompted the Movember foundation to include mental health in its awareness campaign this year, Mbombaci said.

"This is an important step in the evolution of Movember as we're able to continue to address critical men's health issues," he said, adding that the goal is to get people to have discussions about it to reduce stigma and discrimination associated with it.

mental health field to form an industry think tank that will possibly convene in January to address key areas where funding is needed. Once decided, mental health organizations across Canada will be able to apply for funding for projects in the given priority areas, Pete added.

At the Canadian Mental Health Association (CMHA), they've welcomed this Movember initiative, in as far as it will help men take recognition of mental health's severity.

"Many men don't believe they are susceptible to depression for example," said Peter Coleridge, national CEO of CMHA. He said that, just like prostate cancer, men's mental health issues are not spoken about among people, yet this is "the second largest threat to men's health after accidents."

"We encourage all Canadians to maintain and improve their mental health, and seek support and help when needed," he said.

Peter said the Movember campaign will help direct males to resources available to them at CMHA and other health organizations across the country. GILBERT NDIKUBWAYEZU/FOR METRO

Breakfast faves meet in Skillet Blueberry Muffin Pancakes

What do you do when you are hankering for blueberry muffins, but don't have a muffin pan handy? Well, you can cook them the same as you would pancake batter, in a skillet, using the muffin batter.

Why not just make blueberry pancakes? To answer that, look at the differences between pancake and muffin batters. Though recipes will vary, most pancake and muffin recipes call for equal amounts of flour and eggs. But while pancakes call for more liquid, muffins get more sugar, fat and baking powder.

So while muffin batter cooked in a skillet may resemble a pancake, the taste is all muffin. You can even top the muffins with a blend of cinnamon-sugar. This caramelizes beautifully when you flip them. And while muffins can take half an hour to bake, these pancake-style muffins cook up in just minutes.

1. In bowl, stir flour, sugar, baking powder, cinnamon, salt and lemon zest. In separate bowl, whisk together the milk, egg, oil and vanilla.

2. Add liquid ingredients to the dry, then stir just until a batter forms. Gently stir in the blueberries. Set aside.

3. In small bowl, mix brown sugar and cinnamon.

4. Heat skillet over medium. Coat with cooking spray, reduce heat to low, then ladle batter into the skillet, using about 1/3 cup per muffin. Do not crowd the pan, as muffins will spread. Sprinkle the top of each muffin with a bit of the topping. Cover and cook for 6 to 8 minutes, or until risen and browned on the bottom. Use a spatula to flip and cook for another 2 to 4 minutes. Repeat with remaining batter. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The In-Credibility Factor

Name: Daniel Torjman
City: Toronto
Age: 33
Occupation: Designer, founder of clothing and accessory brand 18 Waits

THE IN-CREDIBILITY FACTOR
 Teresa Kruze
 life@metronews.ca

Torjman was working in the fashion industry in New York when he decided to move back to Canada and strike out on his own. He founded 18 Waits, and now his clothing and accessories are featured in high-end North American stores, like Holt Renfrew, and around the world in China, Japan and the United Arab Emirates.

I knew I was on my way when... we brought our collection to sell at a very well regarded trade show in Paris and New York and it was incredibly well-received. We showed alongside the best brands in the world for buyers who came from all over the world and everyone loved our brand and collection. It was pretty exciting as the people who walk these shows are educated, skilled and acutely aware of what's happening in the fashion world on an international level. And we fit right in.

Action Plan

- Be well organized. It's so easy for things to get out of hand — and quickly — when starting a business. Set up a good system of organization right off the bat so you're off to a good start and not trying to clean up messes down the road.

- Surround yourself with the right people. Don't have an ego about it. Find great people to work with and let them do what they're best at without getting in their way.

- Don't give up. It doesn't matter what industry you're in; starting and running your own business is not easy. But if your goal or dream is to do it then all the work is worth it. Don't get frustrated by small failings or not succeeding as fast as you would have hoped. It takes a few years for a business to really find its legs and start working. Lastly, work your ass off. Because that's what it takes to make it work. If you love what you do — which I do — the work is fun and exciting, as opposed to laborious and boring. Love what you do and then work your ass off doing it.

Telling it like it is. W. Brett Wilson tackles the tough side of getting to the top

ELIZABETH
 life@metronews.ca

Dragons' Den co-star and Risky Business host W. Brett Wilson became one of Canada's top investment bankers, but learned the hard way that financial success and the respect of business peers can come at the price of losing health, family and friends.

In his new book Redefining Success, which is in stores tomorrow, Wilson tells the story of hitting the big-time financially while hitting rock-bottom personally, and what led him to redefine his life.

Metro caught up with Wilson to chat about success, business savvy and what it truly means to be satisfied.

If we're being completely honest, does one's personal life have to suffer at least marginally in order to climb the professional ladder?

Yes, there are sacrifices for sure because we can only do one thing at a time and we have competing demands on our time. That simply drives home the relevance of setting priorities to steward ones time with.

What are three key warning signs that you are not balancing work and life properly?

There are many warning signs, but at the personal level when you aren't allocating time to your health, your family and your friends ... quite simply you are not balancing life and work very well.

If I were hoping to get you to invest in my small business idea, what could I tell you that would make you back out immediately?

If you told me the idea was new and you thought it was worth a "flyer" I would question for passion, for the concept and ability and interest in following through — meaning I am gonzo!

What has been the biggest risk you've ever taken in your professional life and did it yield positive or negative results?

tive results?

The biggest risk I ever took, in the eyes of my family and friends and peers, was starting FirstEnergy — the energy-focused brokerage firm — as the entrepreneur. I was comfortable with the risk (it was my life's focus after all), but there were many doubters. Did it work out? Financially it was a success. Personally, it absorbed every waking hour, to the detriment of key relationships in my life.

Can you recall a moment in your life where you felt like you achieved success wholly and completely?

Success is hard to measure, therefore it's hard to respond to the question.

Have I achieved success? The last line in my book offers: "A successful man is one who has earned the respect and admiration of others." I would add, "especially that of his children." On that basis — I hope I have achieved success. I know my life's work is far from done.

Have you been dreaming in digital?

Educating the e-world. Graduates in this growing field don't just know their gear, they get the global picture

life@metronews.ca

Cynthia Baron directs the master of professional studies in digital media program at Northeastern University in Boston, Mass. Like most graduate degrees of this kind, the Northeastern program only emerged in the past few years. She sat down with Metro to discuss this budding field of study.

Digital media studies are relatively new to the landscape of graduate degrees. Why have so many schools developed these programs?

I think it's pretty obvious that it's market-driven in the sense that more and more of our lives are touched by digital technology.

Could you turn your fascination with computers into a full-time career? iStock

There's a big difference between understanding how to use a piece of software and why you would design it that way. And, when you put different processes together, it becomes very complicated.

There wasn't a place to study this in any one academic discipline.

Schools wanted to look at this phenomenon as a whole, instead of trying to do it piecemeal with added classes here and there in other areas of study.

What's the biggest misconception about graduate-level degrees in digital media?

People say, "Why do you need a degree in digital media? Couldn't I just take courses to learn how to use software?" You could, but that doesn't make you a digital media professional. That's like me saying I know how to use Microsoft Word, so that makes me a writer.

Are there fellowship

Careers

Where do I go from here?

Cynthia Baron tells us what jobs digital media students wind up in?

"Interactive design, game design, web design, handheld media products, digital video, photography, 3D animation, web-based journalism. But, often, people come to us from specific fields — programming, engineering, art, design, communications, teaching — and they're looking to go back with a new skill set," she says.

opportunities in this field of study?

Fellowships in these areas are hard to come by. Most programs that do provide fellowships or TA positions offer them to a small number of students.

The vast majority of students in digital media fund their education through student loans.

Marathon meeting offers hope for lockout talks

NHL. No. 2 men from league and players' union have 'frank discussion,' pave way for bargaining sessions to resume

The conversation is flowing again between the NHL and NHL Players' Association.

A marathon meeting between deputy commissioner

Bill Daly and NHLPA special counsel Steve Fehr stretched from Saturday afternoon into the early hours of Sunday morning, and was followed by some encouraging news: The sides expect to return to the bargaining table again soon.

"We met on and off for most of the day and covered a lot of ground," Daly told The Canadian Press via e-mail. "We plan to meet again early in the week."

Daly and Fehr got together at an undisclosed location in an effort to shield themselves from the media spotlight and start finding a way forward in negotiations. The session included "good, frank discussion on the most important issues separating us," according to Daly.

It represented a significant departure in protocol from the last few months, when the parties rarely sat down together for more than an hour or two at a time. The meeting was also unique because it included just the No. 2 men from the league and union, perhaps offering a harbinger of better times ahead (Daly and former NHLPA deputy Ted Saskin laid the groundwork for the deal that ended the 2004-05 lockout).

There was certainly a positive feeling in the air afterwards, with Fehr saying in a statement that he agreed with how Daly summed up the session.

"Hopefully we can continue the dialogue, expand the group, and make steady progress," added Fehr.

There had been no signs of progress since the sides last met in mid-October. In fact, the news had all been negative, with a deadline to salvage an 82-game season passing, the NHL calling off all games through Nov. 30 and an announcement Friday that the Jan. 1 Winter Classic at Michigan Stadium was being postponed, likely until next season. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Title race open after Raikkonen wins in Abu Dhabi

Kimi Raikkonen won a crash-filled Abu Dhabi Grand Prix on Sunday for his first victory since returning to Formula One this year, a result which throws open the drivers' championship with two races remaining.

Raikkonen, the 2007 champion who drives for Lotus, overtook Red Bull's Mark Webber at the start to move into second. He took the lead on the 20th lap when McLaren's Lewis Hamilton retired because of an electrical problem.

Raikkonen held off Ferrari's Fernando Alonso, who finished second. Two-time defending champion Sebastian Vettel clawed back from last to finish third, his lead over Alonso cut to 10 points. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Kyle Lowry and DeMar DeRozan each scored 22 points, Alan Anderson had 18 and the Toronto Raptors earned their first victory of the season Sunday night, beating the Minnesota Timberwolves 105-86.

Andrea Bargnani scored 10 points as the Raptors extended Minnesota's miserable record against Toronto. The Raptors have won 15 of the past 16 meetings, including nine straight at home. Minnesota has not won in Toronto since Jan. 21, 2004.

Andrei Kirilenko scored 17 points and Nikola Pekovic had 15 for the Timberwolves, who were outscored 26-13 in the fourth quarter, making just four of 16 field-goal attempts.

Derrick Williams had nine points and eight rebounds for Minnesota, which is without injured forward Kevin Love (broken hand) and guard Ricky Rubio (left knee).

Winless in two games coming in, Toronto was playing for the second straight night. The Raptors lost 107-100 at Brooklyn on Saturday night, the Nets' first game in their new home.

The Raptors scored 27 points off of 16 Minnesota turnovers in the first half, and got seven points from Lowry in a 12-4 run over the final 3:10 of the second quarter to open a 56-47 lead at the intermission.

The Timberwolves took better care of the ball in the third quarter, committing just three turnovers and cutting the deficit to 79-73 heading into the fourth. Kirilenko scored seven points in the third and Pekovic had six.

Landry Fields opened the fourth with a dunk and Toronto scored nine of the first 12 points of the quarter, opening an 88-76 lead on Anderson's three-pointer with 8:47 left.

Ray, Barnes prepare for familiar playoff foe

CFL. Toronto QB and slotback to face former teammates in playoffs

They made their Toronto debut against the Edmonton Eskimos so it only figures Ricky Ray and Jason Barnes would play their first playoff game with the Argonauts against their former team.

Toronto (9-9) will host Edmonton (7-11) in the East Division semifinal Sunday at Rogers Centre. The Argos earned the right to host the contest by finishing second in the conference, while Edmonton was third in the West but captured the crossover berth after posting a better record than the Hamilton Tiger-Cats and Winnipeg Blue Bombers.

"The way the season has been kind of been coming down, you knew there was a high probability of playing them," Ray said following practice Sunday. "I don't play better by playing with a chip on my shoulder, so for me I'm preparing like it's another game."

But the irony of the playoff matchup wasn't lost upon Barnes.

"I don't know who wrote that script," he said with a chuckle. "I'm just looking forward to the challenge.

"They got us twice this year and I'm definitely looking for some payback."

Toronto made huge headlines last December after acquiring Ray from Edmonton for journeyman quarterback Stephen Jyles, Canadian kicker Grant Shaw and the second pick of the 2012 CFL Canadian college draft.

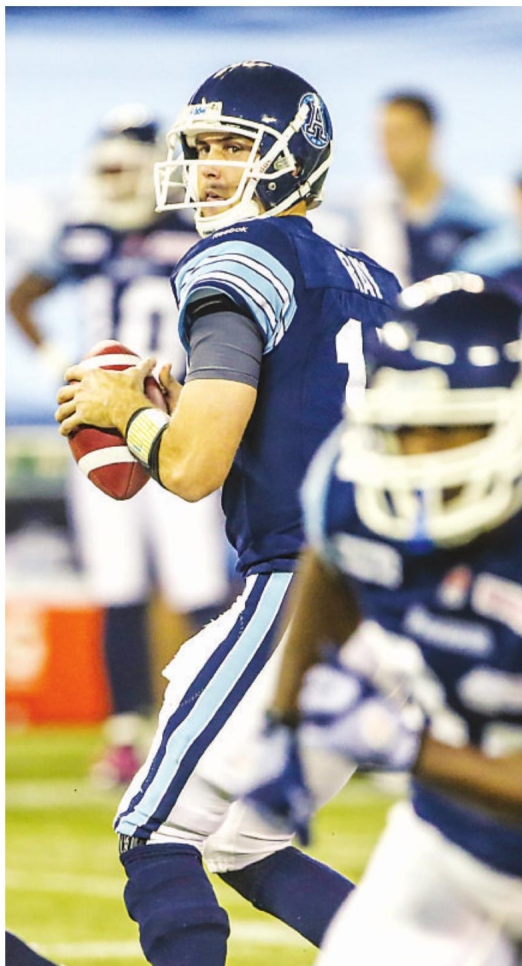

Then in the off-season, Toronto signed Barnes as a free agent. The slotback spent three seasons in Edmonton and was twice released by the club.

Ray struggled early adjusting to head coach Scott Milanovich's offence, but still threw for 4,059 yards this season, the seventh time in his 10-year CFL career he has surpassed the 4,000-yard plateau.

But Edmonton took advantage of Ray's early struggles to sweep the season series with Toronto 2-0. The Eskimos opened the 2012 campaign with a 19-15 home win June 30 before downing the Argos 26-17 at Rogers Centre on Aug. 27.

Ray was a combined 52-of-77 passing against the Eskimos for 549 yards and two TDs, but threw two interceptions in the second defeat. Barnes had six catches for 73 yards in the two games but only two for 14 yards in the second matchup.

three-yard touchdown run in the fourth quarter, Matt Bryant kicked four field goals and the Atlanta Falcons beat the Dallas Cowboys 19-13 on Sunday night to protect their perfect record.

Turner had 20 carries for 102 yards and Matt Ryan had a season-high 342 yards passing for the Falcons (8-0), who took their first lead with 14:16 left in the game.

Tony Romo completed six of six passes for 78 yards, including a 21-yard scoring pass to Kevin Ogletree, on the Cowboys touchdown drive later in the fourth.

The Falcons then worked the clock, holding the ball for five minutes and four seconds, leaving only 17 seconds after Bryant's 32-yard field goal.

NASCAR. Johnson wins on final restart in Texas

Jimmie Johnson regained the lead on the final restart, beating Brad Keselowski in an ending two-lap shootout to win Sunday at Texas and add to his NASCAR Sprint Cup points lead with two races left.

Johnson led 168 laps, but found himself chasing toward the end. The third restart in the late laps proved to be the charm for No. 48 Chevrolet.

During that restart on the 334th of 335 laps, Johnson and Keselowski were side-by-side. Johnson charged hard on the outside, and cleared him on the backstretch and held on for the final 1 1/2 laps.

Horoscopes

Aries

March 21 - April 20

Someone will introduce you to a new idea today and while it may be a bit uncomfortable you will benefit intellectually. But don't get too radical in your thinking: the answers you seek are mainly in the middle ground.

Taurus

April 21 - May 21

Unexpected developments will throw up new challenges and opportunities over the next few days. Are you ready for them? Are you willing to adapt? Only those who know how to think and act fast will gain in the long-term.

Gemini

May 22 - June 21

Your ability to visualize what it is you want to accomplish will make things easy for you this coming week. Others may say you are chasing rainbows, and maybe you are, but at least you have a dream of some sort.

Cancer

June 22 - July 23

Although you may want to comfort someone who has a whole load of personal problems don't make it look as if you condone their negative behavior. Overall, they have only themselves to blame. Sad but true.

Leo

July 24 - Aug. 23

If you don't ask you won't get, so speak up and let others know what it is you want from them. Their response may not be entirely positive but it won't be entirely negative either. You'll get something at least.

Virgo

Aug. 24 - Sept. 23

The planets warn there is still a lot of work to be done to get from where you are now to where you most want to be. The good news is you have a clearly defined goal and can start working towards it.

Libra

Sept. 24 - Oct. 23

You won't be short of ideas and you won't be short of opinions. The one thing you may be short of is the ability to see that not everyone thinks the same way as you. What happened to your Libra sense of balance?

Scorpio

Oct. 24 - Nov. 22

Try not to lapse into negative patterns of behavior, especially where money matters are concerned. If you think you are going to lose out in some way your thoughts will create circumstances that are likely to make it happen.

Sagittarius

Nov. 23 - Dec. 21

Some people seem to think that your main task in life is to look after them. It's about time you let them know it isn't true. Cut off assistance today and let them fend for themselves. In the long-term it will do them good.

Capricorn

Dec. 22 - Jan. 20

Differences of opinion on the work front need to be resolved this week. Colleagues and employers are ready to talk business but are reluctant to make the first move. Fortunately you're much braver than they are.

Aquarius

Jan. 21 - Feb. 19

If you can get away at short notice this is a good time to travel, but if you are stuck in one place there are other ways you can make life interesting. Use your imagination. What you think today you'll be doing tomorrow.

Pisces

Feb. 20 - March 20

You seem to believe that someone is plotting against you. Common sense should tell you there is nothing to fear. SALLY BROMPTON
